One in Six Men Diagnosed with Prostate Cancer in Lifetime

Men's Health Network Launches New Campaign to Educate Newly Diagnosed Men and their Families

Prostate cancer strikes around 186,000 men per year, according to the National Cancer Institute, and kills nearly 28,000. The disease has a devastating impact on families across the country.

When faced with the disease there are a number of treatment paths for patients to choose from. It is important that patients work closely with their physician and determine the treatment path that is right for them.

Men's Health Network has launched a national PSA campaign aimed at educating those who have been newly diagnosed with prostate cancer and stressing the importance of making an informed decision when choosing a treatment path. In addition to existing clinical information, new tests such as Prostate Px Plus examine cellular and molecular features of cancer to help patients and families make the most informed decision possible.

Men's Health Network (www.menshealthnetwork.org) is a national non-profit organization whose mission is to reach men and their families where they live, work, play, and pray with health prevention messages and tools, screening programs, educational materials, advocacy opportunities, and patient navigation.
