Health Event at Cleveland Browns Stadium to Honor Veterans and Their Families

Cleveland, OH, November 10, 2012 – In honor of Veteran’s Day, a free health screening and education event is being hosted today at Cleveland Browns Stadium by The Cleveland Browns, Men’s Health Network, Cuyahoga County Veterans Service Commission, Boehringer Ingelheim, and Cleveland Clinic.

“Not only do attendees get to hang out at Cleveland Browns Stadium with their families, take photos from field level, meet Chomps, the Browns mascot, but they also get the opportunity to take advantage of free health screenings like EKG tests, blood pressure, cholesterol, glucose, and more,” stated Ana Fadich, MPH, CHES, Vice President of Programs at Men’s Health Network.

The event is free and open to the public with screenings available to those 18 years and over. Health educators are on-site to discuss results and benefits of early detection of health issues with participants. Several veteran service organizations will also be onsite to assist veterans with connecting to benefits and resources. Participants also have the opportunity to meet Browns alumni players Hanford Dixon and Sam Palumbo.

“We are once again excited to team up with Men’s Health Network, Cleveland Clinic, and this year Boehringer Ingelheim, as well as other health partner organizations, in offering this free health screening. We care about the importance of health and wellness, and through these services, hope that we encourage people to continuously focus on their own health,” shared Bridget Huzicka of The Cleveland Browns.
